IN THE TYROL.

The Sweeps of the Tyrol affect a peculiar costume, but one which doubtless suits their calling. They come from the larger towns, and periodically make their rounds among the surrounding villages. An awkward moment for these itinerant tradesman occurs if their business leads them past a school at the hour of release; children are the same all the world over, and their sooty condition makes them the butt of much good-humoured chaff, generally however borne in good part.
